"An amazing day out at Sir D's zoo"

Reviewed Yesterday

NEW!

The Sir David Attenborough Children's Zoo is an unforgettable day out. I took my three children to the park on Tuesday 3rd August and arrived at 10:00 a.m. for the opening of the zoo. We had visited to celebrate my daughter's fourth birthday. We arrived by car and parked easily. I was a bit surprised that our family ticket cost $90.00; however, we enjoyed the day so much that we didn't care at all by the afternoon. The highlight of the day was seeing the pandas. We had to queue for about ten minutes to see them, but it was worth every cent. Bertie and Sheba were their names and they were so cute! Walking between different animal zones was easy because of the signs all around the zoo. We booked a time slot at the Chimpanzee Tea Party as we entered the park. This was hilarious. My kids were laughing all the way to the Rainforest Restaurant at lunchtime. I would recommend this place to anyone with children who are able to walk for long periods, so not younger than 4 years old. This is an unforgettable day out and we shall be returning as soon as possible.

"An amazing day out at Sir D's zoo"

The Sir David Attenborough Children's Zoo is an unforgettable day out. I took my three children (13, 8 and 4) to the park and we were shattered by the end. It helped that we had arrived for opening time, so we got halfway round before it felt quite busy. We had visited to celebrate my daughter's fourth birthday – she just loves animals, so we had driven miles to see it after hearing so many good reports. I was a bit surprised that our family ticket cost $90.00, because that is an awful lot of money for most families; however, we enjoyed the day so much that $18.00 per head worked out as a real bargain. Anyway, the highlight for us was seeing the pandas. We had to queue for about ten minutes to see them, but it was worth every cent. Bertie and Sheba have been identified as candidates for the zoo's first breeding program. Walking between different animal zones was easy because of simple signage all around the zoo. We booked a time slot at the Chimpanzee Tea Party as we entered the park. This was hilarious. My kids were definitely inspired by the time we stopped for lunch at the Rainforest Restaurant. I would recommend this place to anyone with children who are able to walk for long periods, so not younger than 4 years old. This is an unforgettable day out and we shall be returning as soon as possible.

The Sir David Attenborough Children's Zoo is an unforgettable day out. I took my three children (13, 8 and 4) to the park and we were shattered by the end. It was a hot day and the zoo was packed, but we didn't queue for long at any of the different zones. It helped that we had arrived for opening time, so we got halfway round before it felt quite busy. We had visited to celebrate my daughter's fourth birthday – she just loves animals, so we had driven miles to see it after hearing so many good reports.

I was a bit surprised that our family ticket cost $90.00, because that is an awful lot of money for most families; however, we enjoyed the day so much that $18.00 per head worked out as a real bargain. It said on the back of the ticket that if you return within 6 months, you get half-price entry, which is a real bonus!

Anyway, the highlight for us was seeing the pandas. We had to queue for about ten minutes to see them, but it was worth every cent. Bertie and Sheba have been identified as candidates for the zoo's first breeding programme. The zookeepers were patiently waiting for news of a panda pregnancy, so I can't wait to find out whether there will be a new little addition to the place. Walking between different animal zones was easy because of simple signage all around the zoo, but there are disability vehicles available for those that find walking more difficult. By the end of the day, we could have done with one of those too! We booked a time slot at the Chimpanzee Tea Party as we entered the park. This was hilarious. I imagine Mary Berry would be covered in Victoria Sponge if she had joined in! My kids were definitely inspired by the time we stopped for lunch at the Rainforest Restaurant, but their behaviour didn't spoil what had been a marvellous day out. I would recommend this place to anyone with children who are able to walk for long periods, so not younger than 4 years old. This is an unforgettable day out and we shall be returning as soon as possible.
